26 June 2014

Besides the crises of the last decade the world faced another economic challenge: the global rise in commodity prices. While high energy prices might have weakened the recovery process of countries affected by the global financial crisis and lowered global growth rates, high agricultural prices have pushed millions of people into poverty. Some argue that fundamental shifts have caused commodity prices to spike. Others hypothesize that the increasing process of financialization and speculation in commodity markets has pushed prices and volatility upwards. This workshop tries to shed some light on the causes and consequences of the commodity price boom. In addition, it seeks regulatory and economic advices for politicians and regulatory authorities. Topics to be considered for the workshop include but are not limited to:

- historical developments and characteristics of commodity markets;
- impact of commodity prices on economic growth, international trade and poverty;
- process of financialisation in commodity markets and its impact on prices and volatility;
- importance of fundamentals and speculative bubbles on commodity prices;
- role of speculators and commodity index traders;
- functioning and regulation of commodity futures markets.

We especially welcome empirical papers, but we will also consider theoretical work. One session will be devoted to presentations by PhD students. Academics and policy makers are encouraged to submit papers.
